NATURE OF RESEARCH
(Goals for Conducting Research)

BACKGROUND INFORMATION FOR LEARNERS

To make a good research, a researcher should be presenting a novel idea in order to ensure that his/her research will have an impact to the society or in different fields such as workplaces, educational disciplines.

Research is a systematic undertaking which serves many goals in different fields. Some of the goals for research are as follows.

1. To produce evidence-based research. The information you use to make decisions or provide best practice of operation is based from research findings
2. To establish credibility in the profession. Research is important for a profession in performing routines and practices. This makes a profession unique from others and this sense of independence contributes to the credibility of a profession.
3. To observe accountability for the profession. In every action performed by a professional must have a reliable reason based from research findings. Ex: (There are proven principles why a teacher has to prepare a lesson plan).
4. To promote cost-effectiveness through documentation. Research must be known and shared publicly. In this manner, individuals, groups, community may utilize the research findings if they find them beneficial or useful in their own respective field of discipline.
